This is a tutorial on creating a biomech style creature bust from concept design to final render. This is basically a how-to on sculpting, UV-mapping and rendering a model in Blender 2.82 This is a learn-by-doing tutorial and a step-by-step breakdown of all the necessary materials and techniques used in the creation of this bust. Have you ever wondered what it takes to make a complex biomech creature? Where do you get the 3D models from? How do you scale 3D models for our tiny human forms? What are the various 3D tools you can use for making 3D models? This tutorial will take you through all the steps for creating a model that is stylised after a biomech creature. I created this bust from a very crude sketch my dad made. He is obsessed with biomech creatures and my girl is too :) My dad said the creature in question can be viewed at TVmausoleum.com.au For this tutorial, I am going to be using Blender 2.82. If you want to learn how to use Blender 2.79, click here. If you want to learn how to take screenshots in Blender 2.79, click here. Needless to say, you do NOT need to create a step-by-step photo shoot tutorial in Blender. This is a tutorial and you are here to learn 3D not take photos. One of the pre-requisites for this tutorial is to have a basic understanding of that the end-user will need to know. Sorry, I don't expect you to be oratorically versed in all the terminology I use either. After taking this tutorial, you should be able to pick up the basic terminology and be able to basically understand what I'm talking about. If you don't, go back to the pre-requisite section and read those again. Step 1: Getting That Critter The first thing you need to do is to take that sketch done by your father and get that critter into 3D. There are plenty of sites and options, but I'm not going to go into it because frankly, I have no clue. For me, I found a great 3D design called Dazlabs to download. I also created my own 3D model using the Dazlabs model as a template. Download the Daz

NOTE: ===== -If the player doesn't want to participate in the Arena, the server password can be reset through the website support page: ===== The game is great, I don't know how I didn't know about it before but it's pretty good. It has a decent story mode but not near as complex as previous games with the story being pretty short though and you can finish it in a day or so at most. The gameplay is still great, you will start in low level and over time as you win matches and unlock new characters you gain their experience which will raise the level cap up to level 30. Some of the new characters are fantastic and you can unlock new parts of their costumes which further increase their stats and raise the level cap further if you unlock the sliders on top of their costumes. The gameplay is fun enough, enemies are varied, enemies will attack the player based on what they are and what they are wearing, some enemies are more resistance to certain attacks while others are weak to certain attacks and you need to stick with certain weapons and attacks to beat them effectively. You can enhance your weapons based on their elemental damage type, you can put up to 3 of the same elemental gem on a weapon for extra bonuses, items and power-ups, some of the more common gems such as fire, ice and thunder all have their own attack type which can increase how much damage it does and how often it procs. Weapon types are similar to attack types in that they all have their own type and can be enhanced and it will increase the damage output. Enemies also get stronger as they level up and they have passive skills which allow them to enhance skills for you and you need to pay to use them. There is also a skill line which you can unlock which allows you to assign skills to specific
