Pleasant, W.Va. – When it comes to upper-level credit courses like American government and economics, social work students at Marshall University have never been exposed to the Jacksonian democracy that emerged in the 1820s as a result of an organized agrarian revolt against the institution of slavery, according to Katlyn Alwine, assistant professor of sociology. The morphology of the microtubules in the cytoplasm of Euplotes acytostomum, a phylogenetically very basal and rare member of the class Hypotrichia, was examined with a monoclonal antibody against β -tubulin. Stable immunostaining with this antibody could be observed in the cilia of the seven identified oral cilia as well as in six ciliary doublets of a left-handed, atrial flagellum, and in the right-handed oral cilia which are oriented right at the base. Interestingly, the 7 + 0 right-handed, atrial flagellum has a lateral outer microtubule, which contributes to the characteristic "claw" at the leading edge of this flagellum. This finding may indicate the ancestral condition in the left-handed atrial flagellum of E. acytostomum, and suggests that the atrial "claw" and oral cilia of E. acytostomum are still related to the ancestral left-handed flagellum of E. marinus. Two proteins of the outer membrane of the axoneme, called A_{beta} and A_r, have their residues recognized by the tubulin antibody. It was found that A_{beta} occupies the six central microtubules in the flagellum. A_{beta} was also found on the extrusome, the flagellum-specific part of the extrusome, which is attached to the last two microtubules of the flagellum. Therefore, it seems likely that A_{beta} originates from these two microtubules, and is exported into the ectocytoblast, where the ectocytoblastal membranes transform into the cytoplasm.
