Steam fix.jpgQ: How to validate user input using javascript I have been searching all over to find an answer to my question but didn't find anything that could solve my problem. I have a form that is currently working but I don't know if the form is fully complete. I am getting an "You must provide a company name" message. I am using the following code. PHP: HTML: Company Name As you can see, when searching for a company name, I want the following to happen: a) If the company name has already been entered in the database, I want to prevent the search of the company name. b) If the company name has been entered, I want to validate that the company name is not longer than x characters c) Make sure that only characters are entered and that the space between words is removed. d) If the company name has already been entered, display an error message. e) If the company name has not been entered, display a message that says "You must provide a company name". I was reading the jQuery documentation on validation but I couldn't find what I needed. Any help would be greatly appreciated. A: Have the form check to see if the company name is empty. If it is, then turn the company name form element off, and either show an error message or submit the form with a blank company name. $companyname = trim($_POST['companyname']); if (!empty($companyname)) { echo "
