So, as you can see I have the HTML and this is the printed version, and this is what I want to get. A: You can combine these two steps, using the answer of albertwiese to how to convert a pdf to image with Python. Have a look at this question: Extracting part of PDF to image with Python? You can then apply this to your problem as follows: from PIL import Image from pdfminer.pdfdocument import PDFDocument from pdfminer.pdfpage import PDFPage pdf_document = PDFDocument(file) # Open your PDF pdf_page = pdf_document.open_page(0) # Open the first page original = pdf_page.extract() # Extract the image. # Convert to 32 bit PNG. original = original.convert("RGB") # Find the page numbers of the original image. # You can use this to find the page numbers you want to extract. page_numbers = list(pdf_page.pages) # Create an image with the original and the page numbers. image = Image.new("RGB", original.size, "white") image.putalpha(original) image.putalpha([0, 0, 0, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255]) image.putalpha([255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255, 255]) # Get the image data of the original. original_data = original.getdata() # Put the page numbers to the beginning of the image data. original_data = original_data[:page_numbers[0]] # Put the image data into the new file. file.write(original_data) However, this is only a proof of concept. It is also entirely possible that you can improve the conversion by using other programs and functions (and removing the step that creates the original), but I suggest you to read the question with the PyPDF2 reference that I provide. Maybe you can come up with a solution using PyPDF2. Kosmos 2439 Kosmos 2439 (meaning Space 2439) is a Russian US-K missile early warning satellite which was launched in 2008 as part of 6d1f23a050
